

Mergers & Acquisitions: Pre-Transactional & Transactional Vetting

COVID-19 has created a more urgent M&A market, rushing strained industries into deals for survival, and forcing booming sectors into partnerships just to keep pace. Don't let this urgency affect your vetting processes; these disruptions can bring forth both earnest new colleagues and bad actors – and you need a reliable method to distinguish between the two.

Polaris can assess prospective partners and their executives, screening for red flags and verifying current operations with customizable and comprehensive pre-transactional and transactional services – all targeted to your specific risks.

THE FIELD TODAY

COVID-19 continues to strain many vital industries in the United States, leading companies in particularly affected or at-risk fields scrambling to survive. In an effort to recoup losses or strengthen future prospects, these distressed companies may quickly enter into deals with questionable partners under questionable terms, expediting vetting and verifications due to the stress of the pandemic.

Inversely, as global businesses recover from the COVID-19 Pandemic in the coming months, the pace of deals is sure to quicken. While the virus led to significant slowdowns in M&A activity in most vectors, experts expect rebounds in the US and abroad as companies adapt to the Pandemic's "new normal" – especially in healthcare, IT, and other sectors that are well-equipped to navigate the virus' restrictions.

Even as proper transactional or pre-transactional due diligence is deemed less urgent – either in the fast-moving post-pandemic boom, or in the stressing circumstances of economic slowdown – companies should be thorough when conducting mergers or acquisitions in the Pandemic Era. Polaris can help your company manage the risks of these deals with the efficiency and urgency you need, offering essential services like reputational assessments, watchlist & sanctions checks, adverse media reviews, key executive screenings and operational verifications.
